“The severe winters of the 1880’s and 1890’s froze most of the peach and sweet cherry trees, but the apples, pears and sour cherries were hardy and thrifty and they produced bountiful crops without fertilization or spraying. As these trees reached maturity, they produced much more fruit than could be consumed locally.

This led to the great problem of finding a market for the surplus.”

— From the Northport Centennial, 1849-1949, in explaining how Leelanau came to produce more cherries than any other county in the nation.
